G. Internet sources in the field of human rights law

There are many internet sources which allow an easy orientation and a quick access to international human rights law. See the links on the special website for this course. See in particular the website of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (www.ohchr.org). There you find introductory information and the text of the most important human rights treaties (www.ohchr.org/en/instruments-listings#tab-1) and of other human rights treaties and soft law (www.ohchr.org/en/instruments-listings#tab-2). The same applies for the website Human Rights Library of the University of Minnesota (www1.umn.edu/humanrts/index.html). The text of the European human rights treaties is available on the website of the Council of Europe (www.coe.int/en/web/conventions/by-subject-matters1?module=treaties-full-list&CodeMatiere=44), the text of the American human rights treaties at the website of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (www.oas.org/en/IACHR/jsForm/?File=/en/iachr/mandate/basic_documents.asp). African human rights treaties are published by the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (<https://www.achpr.org/resources>). Make sure that you use only websites with reliable, thorough legal information for your legal research!

H. Note on the reliability of legal literature in the field of international human rights law

Keep your critical distance when dealing with legal literature on international human rights law. Some authors tend to confound law and legal politics. Some may even present their own wishful thinking as prevailing law. Furthermore, not all authors distinguish adequately between the international human rights treaties (which represent an important part of public international law) and the so-called "soft law" (political resolutions of international organisations or summits, which are not a source of law and therefore not binding the states directly). In human rights law as in other fields of law, successful, sustainable work depends decisively on a methodologically sound approach.
